—With the fast presses and improved facilities for quick delivery the city papers began to make the inroad into the field of country journalism. The latter has been driven to a different but no less important position. The country paper of to-day fills a field which no paper published outside the boundaries of its own county can enter. It is its function to improve its county, and this it does. The importance of the country paper cannot be overestimated, and it deserves the warmest and most cordial support. If a community would pick up its own county paper, and read it, it would be able to appreciate the value of those it has. It advises the advantages of its county, it publishes the latest vetements of the people; it informs them of every event, from the most trivial to the most important, which is going on around them. In short, it is indispensable. —Press and Editor.
