Burgoyne Visited at Gansevoort Residence

One of the first examples of the new General Headquarters of the British army at Saratoga was the old Dutch Reformed Church parsonage, occupied by Burgoyne and his staff. The parsonage was located on the north side of the road leading from Saratoga to Greenbush, about two miles from the battle area.

The preparations for the invasion of America by Burgoyne were well advanced by the time he arrived at the parsonage. He had already received intelligence of the American troops under Washington, which were moving south to await the arrival of the British force. The parsonage was occupied by Burgoyne and his staff, including General James Clinton, who was in command of the American forces.

The preparations for the invasion of America by Burgoyne were well advanced by the time he arrived at the parsonage. He had already received intelligence of the American troops under Washington, which were moving south to await the arrival of the British force. The parsonage was occupied by Burgoyne and his staff, including General James Clinton, who was in command of the American forces.

The preparations for the invasion of America by Burgoyne were well advanced by the time he arrived at the parsonage. He had already received intelligence of the American troops under Washington, which were moving south to await the arrival of the British force. The parsonage was occupied by Burgoyne and his staff, including General James Clinton, who was in command of the American forces.

The preparations for the invasion of America by Burgoyne were well advanced by the time he arrived at the parsonage. He had already received intelligence of the American troops under Washington, which were moving south to await the arrival of the British force. The parsonage was occupied by Burgoyne and his staff, including General James Clinton, who was in command of the American forces.

The preparations for the invasion of America by Burgoyne were well advanced by the time he arrived at the parsonage. He had already received intelligence of the American troops under Washington, which were moving south to await the arrival of the British force. The parsonage was occupied by Burgoyne and his staff, including General James Clinton, who was in command of the American forces.

The preparations for the invasion of America by Burgoyne were well advanced by the time he arrived at the parsonage. He had already received intelligence of the American troops under Washington, which were moving south to await the arrival of the British force. The parsonage was occupied by Burgoyne and his staff, including General James Clinton, who was in command of the American forces.

The preparations for the invasion of America by Burgoyne were well advanced by the time he arrived at the parsonage. He had already received intelligence of the American troops under Washington, which were moving south to await the arrival of the British force. The parsonage was occupied by Burgoyne and his staff, including General James Clinton, who was in command of the American forces.

The preparations for the invasion of America by Burgoyne were well advanced by the time he arrived at the parsonage. He had already received intelligence of the American troops under Washington, which were moving south to await the arrival of the British force. The parsonage was occupied by Burgoyne and his staff, including General James Clinton, who was in command of the American forces.

The preparations for the invasion of America by Burgoyne were well advanced by the time he arrived at the parsonage. He had already received intelligence of the American troops under Washington, which were moving south to await the arrival of the British force. The parsonage was occupied by Burgoyne and his staff, including General James Clinton, who was in command of the American forces.

The preparations for the invasion of America by Burgoyne were well advanced by the time he arrived at the parsonage. He had already received intelligence of the American troops under Washington, which were moving south to await the arrival of the British force. The parsonage was occupied by Burgoyne and his staff, including General James Clinton, who was in command of the American forces.

The preparations for the invasion of America by Burgoyne were well advanced by the time he arrived at the parsonage. He had already received intelligence of the American troops under Washington, which were moving south to await the arrival of the British force. The parsonage was occupied by Burgoyne and his staff, including General James Clinton, who was in command of the American forces.

The preparations for the invasion of America by Burgoyne were well advanced by the time he arrived at the parsonage. He had already received intelligence of the American troops under Washington, which were moving south to await the arrival of the British force. The parsonage was occupied by Burgoyne and his staff, including General James Clinton, who was in command of the American forces.

The preparations for the invasion of America by Burgoyne were well advanced by the time he arrived at the parsonage. He had already received intelligence of the American troops under Washington, which were moving south to await the arrival of the British force. The parsonage was occupied by Burgoyne and his staff, including General James Clinton, who was in command of the American forces.

The preparations for the invasion of America by Burgoyne were well advanced by the time he arrived at the parsonage. He had already received intelligence of the American troops under Washington, which were moving south to await the arrival of the British force. The parsonage was occupied by Burgoyne and his staff, including General James Clinton, who was in command of the American forces.

The preparations for the invasion of America by Burgoyne were well advanced by the time he arrived at the parsonage. He had already received intelligence of the American troops under Washington, which were moving south to await the arrival of the British force. The parsonage was occupied by Burgoyne and his staff, including General James Clinton, who was in command of the American forces.